

Abstract

The present invention concerns methods and instruments for the definition of the three-dimensional distribution of the temperature of dielectric objects, non-invasively. It is based on the possibility of measuring with extreme precision the electro-magnetic heat emission that results within the internal presence of objects with temperatures superior to absolute zero.

09869006 "100504"